Caucasus (Russian military formation)

The Caucasus is a tactical military unit within the Russian Ground Forces, most notably composed of the Kavkaz-Caucasus Brigade, and a separate Special Purpose Brigade for the Novorossiia operational concept. The Caucasus Brigade is the most prominent of the parent formations, and the only one based around a major city.

Overview

The Caucasus is the most prominent unit of the Russia Ground Forces, and is called the "key element" of the CFE Treaty. Its ten subordinate regiments and one brigade are based across the North Caucasus. The unit has a strong history of victories in the Chechen wars. Subunits include:

- Caucasus Infantry Brigade: Kavkaz-Caucasus Brigade (based in Dagestan)
- North Ossetian-Ingushetian Special Purpose Brigade
- Krasnodar Mechanised Infantry Brigade (Georgia)
- National Guard of Azerbaijan (Baku)

Lineage and honors

Kavkaz-Caucasus Brigade

The Kavkaz-Caucasus Brigade has its heritage in the Separate Mountain Rifle Brigade, which was raised in 1916, and fought in World War I. On 20 June 1942, under the command of Red Army general Ivan Maslennikov, it was transferred to the newly formed 102nd Rifle Division. When Maslenikov was awarded the honorary title Hero of the Soviet Union on 15 September 1942, the unit became known as the 102nd Separate Mountain Rifle Division. It was awarded the Order of Lenin on 4 December 1942. In October 1942, the division was transferred to the 46th Rifle Corps. In January 1944, the 102nd was awarded the name Kavkaz-Caucasus, and became part of the troops in the 15th Guards Rifle Corps. In February 1945, it became the 10th Guards Rifle Division of the 37th Army. In June, it was transferred to the 49th Rifle Corps of

1. Technical Field The present invention relates to an image scanning apparatus, and more particularly to an image scanning apparatus capable of accurately scanning an image having a color pattern on its surface.
2. Related Art There is known a digital copying machine equipped with a scanner to convert an image of an object which is read by the scanner into a digital signal for copying. When the scanner is used for scanning an image of an object, it is preferable that the image of the object be scanned at a scanning rate corresponding to that at which the scanner is designed to be used. Furthermore, when a colorless optical black is provided for an image-forming operation in the scanning, the scanner should provide a sufficient accuracy, which is determined by its accuracy and the accuracy of the optical black, for correctly detecting the image of the object. However, as is known, an image of an object sometimes has a color pattern on its surface. In this case, it is also preferable to use a scanner which is designed with a color pattern on its input surface and a color pattern on its output surface in consideration of a difference in density of a color pattern on the input surface and a density of a color pattern on the output surface. For example, there is known a scanner in which color filters are disposed on an input surface and an output surface of the scanner. In this type of scanner, even if an input surface of a color pattern has a low density, light emitted from a light source can reach the output surface of the scanner and the light is reproduced at a desired density, because the filters absorb light having a wavelength other than a wavelength of light emitted from the light source and can transmit only light having the wavelength of the light source. In this type of scanner, a color pattern image on an input surface of the scanner is visually detected by an operator of the scanner and the output surface of the scanner is mechanically corrected, or the color pattern image on 6d1f23a050
